

Top 10 security must-haves for your bank

Choosing a physical security solution can be complicated. Check out the list below of things to consider, and if you're looking for more details be sure to download our white paper.

1 Unification

Leave legacy systems behind and overcome silos. With a unified physical security platform, you can manage the security of all your branches from a single interface.

2 Hardware flexibility

Open your mind to open architecture. Unlike most legacy systems, an open architecture solution is inherently flexible - allowing you to choose the hardware and software that best suits your needs.

3 Data protection

Amp up your cybersecurity. Cyber-crime levels are at an all-time high, so you need a solution that has built-in security features to protect all of your data.

4 Agility

Timing is everything. Your security teams need the ability to control edge devices and quickly access video evidence from anywhere, using their own tablets and smartphones.

5 Situational awareness

Get the right tools for the job. A map-based interface can provide valuable insights to your security team, who quickly need to know where they're going and what to expect when they get there.

6 Risk mitigation

There's risk in every situation. You need a system that can automate threat levels and react with or without human intervention.

7 Video investigations

Don't waste time. Your security teams need to be able to react quickly. They can resolve issues faster by having all transaction data and branch video easily accessible from one interface.

8 Data storage

The future is now. Cloud or hybrid-cloud systems are the way forward, allowing for unlimited storage and high levels of security.

9 Compliance

Stay secure and stay compliant. Your physical security software should automate security policies, audits, and compliance reviews to avoid undesirable consequences such as fines and data theft.

10 Access management

Keep people and buildings safe. Automate the access management of your branches and improve the workflow and efficiency of your operators and front desk staff, all while reducing the risk of manual error.
